

Health

Provides access to subject matter expertise, data and other resources related to public health events, including COVID-19, and the implications of those events for air travel. Specific themes will include medical developments related to COVID-19 or other infectious diseases (e.g., transmissibility, variants and vaccines); border policies and public health mitigation measures (e.g., vaccination requirements, testing regimes and contact tracing tools) and technological solutions (e.g., digital health passes, contactless travel). As well as discussion of recent developments and lessons learned from COVID-19 and previous health outbreaks the program also looks beyond the current situation to consider if and how public health issues will impact the future of air travel. Resources draw on recommendations from the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and the World Health Organization (WHO) to keep passengers and crew safe.
